January was a strong month for global markets, and Australia was no different with the ASX200 up 1.8%, with the returns largely concentrated in resources. The benchmark ASX100 equal weighted index was up 1.1% during the month, and we were pleased that the Fund, which was up 1.4%, outperformed by 0.3% during the month.

Resources again lead the market last month but with a significant drawdown on the final two days of January. Firstly, gold and silver surged as the precious metals bull market became increasingly speculative and leveraged traders eventually were forced to sell when the metals prices corrected. This supported holdings Evolution (+16.0%), Newmont (+15.4%), and Ramelius (+13.5%) during the month. We did use this opportunity to take profits and to manage our overall gold exposure fearful of a potential pullback given its rapid ascent, however with global conditions the way they are we will likely continue to accumulate exposure on any pullback. The precious metal rally and increasing global awareness of the strategic importance of resources also drove up iron ore, copper and other commodities. We took the opportunity to lighten our positions in Rio Tinto, Capstone Copper and Develop Global into this rally. Again, we will likely be buyers of resources companies on weakness.

Outside of resources one of our top contributors over the month was BlueScope Steel which received a takeover offer from Seven Group and US listed Steel Dynamics. Another standout was ALS Ltd which does core assay testing for gold mines and clearly is seeing an improved outlook in this gold price back drop.

2026 will likely be another eventful year that looks set to start with strong US growth, imminent rate cuts as well as significant federal deficits, that looks to provide solid demand for real assets and in particular resources. Meanwhile domestically equity market valuations have come back to more palatable levels and we are finding some well-priced parts of the market. You should expect us to remain nimble, looking to take advantage of opportunities and in particular to adjust our resources holdings to take advantage of expected volatility.
