The Fund rose 0.9% in December (benchmark +2.5%), as the market moderated expectations for the speed at which US interest rates will fall. The Fund's relative performance during the month was constrained by not owning some large stocks that had a strong month, as well as the underperformance of some Industrial holdings.

Positive contributors: French carmaker, Renault (+16.1%) outperformed amidst signs its new models are being well-received by customers, and news that its partner Nissan (in which Renault holds an equity stake) is exploring a merger with Honda and Mitsubishi. Amazon (+5.5%) rose as investors position for acceleration in AWS (cloud) growth, an increasing contribution from high margin advertising sales, and the maintenance of its leading US eCommerce market share.

Detractors: Mobility services company, Uber Technologies (-16.2%), fell on increased fears its ridesharing market position will be disrupted when the world eventually transitions to robotaxis. US Managed Care Organisation, Elevance (-9.0%), declined amidst healthcare policy uncertainty; we consider these fears overdone and maintained our position. Not owning Tesla (+17.0%) impacted short-term relative performance; we are happy to "miss" stocks like this and believe focusing on investments with fundamental valuation support will be rewarded over time.

Fund Activity: We opportunistically increased the Fund's Arthur Gallagher position after shares fell in reaction to slowing organic growth and a larger acquisition announcement, that we believe will prove to be value accretive. The Fund increased its position in Equifax, a high-quality company with earnings that are positively exposed to lower interest rates. Equifax's share price fell on the market's recalibration of interest rate expectations, and we believe the shares present good value to a patient investor. The remaining Uber position was exited in favour of higher conviction ideas.

We continue to seek attractively valued, good quality companies with idiosyncratic drivers of investment returns.
