The Fund fell 3.1% in April, a volatile month as investors digested US trade policy. Fund performance was helped by its industrial and European holdings.

Positive contributors: UK utilities SSE plc (+6.1%) and National Grid (+7.3%) are indifferent to tariffs and offer defensive value. Credit bureau Equifax (+6.8%) reported solid results with healthy consumer finance trends and a less negative outlook commentary than expected. API Group's (+5.8%) resilient earnings profile as a service provider of critical life safety systems, was also in demand.

Detractors: US payment processor Fiserv (-16.4%) and life science company Avantor (-19.9%) declined after issuing earnings updates below investor expectations. We had reduced both to manage risk and have added back to Fiserv following the share price decline.

Fund activity: After shifting modestly more defensively in March, we have been maintaining portfolio balance by selectively adding to 1) stocks with defensive earnings that became more attractively valued in the sell-off, and 2) more cyclical companies with valuations that now reflect a dire economic scenario. A category "1" example is our entry into TransDigm Group, a highly profitable supplier of aerospace components with earnings growth supported by mandated aircraft maintenance and strong pricing power, resilient to macroeconomic fluctuations.

In the second category, we added XPO, a leading US less-than-truckload carrier. Through improved service levels under new management, it has the potential to double profit-per-shipment over time and continue to deliver strong earnings through a freight downcycle. Recession fears have created an attractive entry point for a quality business, which is well positioned for a cyclical recovery, and a net beneficiary of increased domestic manufacturing (in response to tariffs) with its high exposure to US industrial freight.

The current market volatility is creating opportunity; we continue to seek attractively valued, good quality companies with idiosyncratic drivers of investment returns.
