The Fund fell 1.2% in December as equity markets capped off a positive 2025. Relative fund performance during the month was helped by a diverse set of stocks whilst some holdings underperformed after announcing material Mergers and Acquisitions transactions.

Positive contributors: US-listed cruise operator, Carnival (+18.5%) reported solid 2025 results and issued 2026 guidance that reflects continued positive booking, pricing and on-board spend trends. Building materials supplier, CRH (+4.0%), gained following its announced inclusion into the S&P500 index. Equipment manufacturer Keyence (+6.7%), software company Nice (+6.6%) and insurer Arthur J. Gallagher (+4.8%) also recovered from recent dips in share prices (on little news).

Detractors: Insurance brokers Baldwin Group (-15.7%) declined after the announcement of its intended acquisition of CAC Group, a highly complementary specialty insurance brokerage business; we view the deal positively despite the issuance of equity to fund the acquisition and added to our position on weakness. The Fund also has a small holding in streaming giant Netflix (-12.8%) which underperformed following announcement of its intended acquisition of Warner Brothers. This is seen as a strategic content win but adds complexity and uncertainty, dilutes earnings per share and adds debt to Netflix's balance sheet.

Fund Activity: We added credit rating agency S&P Global (+4.8%); we see a positive outlook for its ratings business supported by corporate debt refinancing requirements, private markets activity and infrastructure investment (including to support generative AI spend). Trading valuations for many information services companies have fallen as investors fear disruption by generative AI; we believe these fears are misplaced at S&P Global and see value in the shares. We also added Wise plc, a leading provider of low-cost foreign exchange solutions. Its shares underperformed after it announced short-term investments pressuring current earnings but supporting attractive long-term growth potential.

We continue to maintain a portfolio of attractively valued good quality companies with idiosyncratic drivers of investment returns.
